Part C: Reading Comprehension + Analysis (Q26–30)

Read the passage excerpt and answer the questions below.

I stood frozen just outside the doorway of Room 214, clutching the frayed straps of my backpack as if they were a lifeline. The bell had already rung, and the murmurs of students inside were now a full-blown symphony of voices. I took a deep breath. First day. New school. Again.

My footsteps echoed far too loudly as I entered. Every pair of eyes seemed to swivel in my direction, assessing, measuring. A lump grew in my throat, heavy as a stone. I walked to the only empty seat near the window, head down, pretending not to notice the whisper behind me or the giggle that followed.

"Welcome, Layla," the teacher said with a warm smile. "We're just starting a group project. You can join Michael's group."

I turned to find a boy with headphones around his neck and an unreadable expression. He gave a small nod. I nodded back.

Something about that tiny exchange—a connection, however tentative—made the lump shrink, just a little.

- 26. What is the narrator's main conflict in the passage?
- 27. What literary device is used in the line: "My stomach fluttered like a thousand trapped butterflies"?
- 28. How does the author create a tone of tension in the opening paragraph?
- 29. What can we infer about the protagonist's personality based on her internal thoughts?
- 30. Why is the ending of the excerpt considered a turning point?

Part D: Writing Task (Q31–35)

Writing Prompt:

A student holds a sign that reads: "No Homework = More Learning!" while standing outside a school.

- 31. In a well-organized paragraph (150–200 words), argue either in favor of or against the claim using clear reasoning and examples.
- 32. Identify and label your topic sentence and supporting points.
- 33. Use at least one rhetorical device in your paragraph. Identify it.
- 34. Revise this sentence for clarity and impact: "I think not having homework could be good because kids get more free time."
- 35. Conclude your paragraph with a reflection or implication of your stance.

Part B: Reading Comprehension (Q19-23)

Passage: Informational Text – Excerpt from a climate change report

Over the last century, global temperatures have risen at an unprecedented rate. Scientists attribute this increase largely to human activities such as fossil fuel consumption, deforestation, and industrial emissions. While some regions may experience temporary benefits, such as longer growing seasons, the overwhelming majority of climate consequences—rising sea levels, extreme weather, and ecosystem disruption—pose severe risks to communities worldwide.

- 19. What is the main idea of the passage?
- 20. Which human activities are mentioned as causes of climate change?
- 21. What does the author suggest about the overall impact of climate change?
- 22. Identify one cause-and-effect relationship in the passage.
- 23. What is the tone of the passage?
  - A. Humorous
  - B. Informative
  - C. Indifferent
  - D. Personal

Part C: Literary Analysis (Q24–30)

Passage (Fiction – Literary Analysis):

The old willow tree stood guard at the edge of the field, its branches sweeping the ground like tired arms. Each spring, Mira returned to it—her secret place, her memory anchor. It was under this tree that her grandmother had told her stories, braided her hair, and reminded her to always speak kindly, even when the world wasn't kind back.

Now, as the wind whispered through the leaves, Mira pressed her palm against the trunk. The bark was rough, but familiar. "Still here," she murmured, blinking away a tear.

- 24. Identify a symbol in the passage and explain its meaning.
- 25. What mood is created by the description of the willow tree?
- 26. How does the author reveal Mira's emotional state?
- 27. What is the significance of the grandmother's advice?
- 28. What literary device is used in "its branches sweeping the ground like tired arms"?

- 29. Explain how the setting contributes to the theme of memory.
- 30. What change in Mira's perspective (if any) is implied at the end?

Part D: Writing Prompt (Q31–35)

Tasks:

- 31. Write a paragraph (150–200 words) analyzing the social commentary suggested by the image.
- 32. State your thesis clearly in the opening sentence.
- 33. Support your argument with one concrete example or scenario.
- 34. Use at least one rhetorical device (e.g., contrast, repetition, metaphor).
- 35. End your paragraph with a reflective or provocative sentence.

Part B: Reading Comprehension (Q19–23)

Passage - Fiction: The Thirteenth Hour

In the quiet town of Evershade, something subtle had shifted. It wasn't a sound or a smell, but a feeling, like the whisper of wind before a storm. The townspeople, busy with daily chores, hardly noticed the way shadows began lingering longer on the cobblestones or how the birds grew silent after noon. Only Lila, the clockmaker's daughter, paid attention. Her father said she noticed things most ignored—the tilt in someone's smile, the absence of a familiar footstep, the chill behind a closed door. So when the town's central clock began striking thirteen at midnight, she didn't just dismiss it as a malfunction.

Lila first heard it on a Thursday, long after the rest of the household had gone to sleep. The bell rang once, then again—clear and deliberate—until it reached thirteen. She sat up in bed, her heart tapping a fast rhythm against her ribs. The next morning, she asked her father if he had noticed anything unusual. He shook his head, too absorbed in repairing a cuckoo clock to look up.

The next night, she waited by her window, notebook in hand. Again, at exactly midnight, the clock tower struck thirteen. The sound was haunting—neither completely mechanical nor entirely human. She jotted down the time, the weather, even the strange echo that followed. By the fifth night, she noticed something else: a dark figure pacing around the base of the tower just as the bell rang.

Curiosity outweighed fear. Lila packed a satchel with a flashlight, a snack, and a small wrench—just in case. She tiptoed out of the house and made her way across the town square. The night air was crisp, and each footstep sounded too loud. As she approached the tower, the bells began to toll. One. Two. Three. She counted aloud until thirteen, and then silence fell.

Suddenly, the door to the clock tower creaked open. The figure stepped out—an old man in a long gray coat, with eyes as sharp as brass gears. "You hear it too," he said, as if they'd been mid-conversation.

Lila nodded. "Why thirteen?"

He smiled faintly. "Because time doesn't always follow rules, especially not here."

They climbed the stairs inside the tower, and with every step, Lila felt she was crossing into another version of Evershade—one where time twisted like ribbon. Inside the clock chamber, gears turned in slow, deliberate motion. A thirteenth chime hammer had been added—not built into the original design, but forged in secret. The old man called it "the Echo Gear," a device that allowed moments to stretch longer, to be relived or delayed.

"Why would someone want to stretch time?" she asked.

"To fix things," he said simply. "To say what was never said. To stop something terrible. But every use leaves a mark."

Lila understood. Her mother had passed the previous winter, and she often wished for one more minute, one more bedtime story. But even as that longing tugged at her heart, she knew time wasn't meant to be tangled.

"I think it's time we fix the clock," she said.

Together, they removed the thirteenth hammer. The gears sighed as if relieved. When they stepped outside, the sky was already blushing with the first hints of dawn. Birds chirped. Wind rustled the leaves. Time, at last, moved on.

Sample Questions:

- 19. What subtle changes begin happening in the town of Evershade?
- 20. How is Lila portrayed as different from other townspeople?
- 21. What might the striking of thirteen at midnight symbolize?
- 22. How does the author build suspense in the passage?
- 23. What role does setting play in establishing tone?

Part C: Literary Analysis (Q24-30)

Literary Analysis Passage – Booklet 3:

The painting hung crookedly on the wall, just as he'd left it. Sunlight filtered through the blinds, casting pale stripes on the floorboards where dust danced lazily. Every object in the room, from the overstuffed armchair to the cracked blue vase, seemed to lean in, waiting. She stood still, afraid to breathe too loudly, as if the room might remember her and sigh.

- 24. What mood is established by the imagery in the first two sentences?
- 25. Identify one example of personification and explain its effect.
- 26. What can we infer about the person who "left" the painting?
- 27. How does the author use symbolism to express emotional memory?
- 28. Rewrite the final sentence in your own words while keeping its meaning.
- 29. What theme does the passage suggest?
- 30. How does the contrast between stillness and memory shape the tone?

Part D: Writing Prompt (Q31–35)

Prompt (Quote-Based):

Part B: Reading Comprehension (Q19-23)

Passage – Memoir: A Lesson on the Court

I was eleven when I learned what losing felt like—not the kind you cry over, but the kind that burrows deep and teaches you something. The sun that afternoon had been scorching. The basketball court shimmered with heat, and the asphalt seemed to pulse beneath our sneakers. It was the semi-finals of the inter-school tournament, and I had been practicing for weeks, dreaming of this day.

Coach Morales always said, "You miss 100% of the shots you don't take." So I took every chance I got. Layups, passes, even that one wild three-pointer from near half-court. My teammates trusted me, and I wore that like armor. Maybe that was the problem.

We were ahead by four points at halftime. I had scored 10 of our 18. People cheered. The principal even nodded from the bleachers. It felt like I had already won. But by the fourth quarter, my energy started to dip. I kept going, trying to carry the game on my shoulders—until I missed a key pass. Then a free throw. Then another.

In the last minute, our opponents scored twice. The buzzer rang, and we'd lost by one.

I stood in the middle of the court, staring at my sneakers. A lump formed in my throat. The court, once alive with energy, now felt hollow. My teammates patted my back, but I couldn't meet their eyes. I knew they had counted on me. I had let them down.

Coach didn't scold me. He just walked over, tossed me a towel, and said, "You played your heart out. That matters more than the scoreboard."

I didn't believe him—not at first. It felt like something adults said to soften failure. But that night, as I replayed the game in my head, I remembered more than just the missed shots. I remembered how we encouraged each other from the bench, how Jason blocked a crucial shot in the third quarter, how Priya passed up an open shot to get me a better one. We had played as a team. I just hadn't seen it then.

Two weeks later, Coach announced the summer training program. I didn't want to go. I felt like I didn't deserve it. But when I showed up—mostly to return my jersey—Coach simply pointed me to the court.

"No one's perfect," he said. "But if you want to lead, learn to lift others with you."

That summer, I passed more than I shot. I encouraged the younger players. I watched how others moved and played to their strengths. By fall, I was captain—not because I scored the most, but because I had learned what leadership really meant.

Now, years later, I barely remember the final score of that lost game. But I remember the lesson: leadership isn't about always winning—it's about who you become when you lose.

Sample Questions:

- 19. What lesson does the narrator learn during the course of the memory?
- 20. How is the narrator's emotional growth revealed through action?
- 21. Identify one key metaphor or descriptive phrase and interpret its meaning.
- 22. What changes in tone can be observed between the opening and closing paragraphs?
- 23. Why is the setting significant in this memoir?

Part C: Literary Analysis (Q24–30)

Literary Analysis Passage – Booklet 4:

The old playground was quieter now, its colors faded by years of sun and laughter. Rust lined the swing chains, and weeds peeked through the rubber matting. But as Mia stepped onto the cracked slide, she felt a familiar thrill. This was where she had learned to race, to fall, to forgive.

She closed her eyes and listened to the creak of the see-saw, wondering if echoes from the past ever truly left a place.

- 24. What does the phrase "echoes from the past" suggest in this context?
- 25. How does the author use contrast between past and present?
- 26. Identify and explain one sensory detail that evokes emotion.
- 27. What does the playground symbolize for Mia?
- 28. What theme is implied about memory and place?
- 29. How would the passage be different if written from Mia's childhood perspective?
- 30. Write a one-sentence summary of the passage's central message.

Part D: Writing Prompt (Q31–35)

Prompt (Scenario-Based):

You are elected as class president and must propose one major school change. You choose to implement "No-Phone Fridays."

- 31. Write a persuasive paragraph explaining the benefits of No-Phone Fridays.
- 32. Start with a clear thesis.
- 33. Provide one example of how this policy could improve learning or community.
- 34. Address a possible counterargument and refute it.
- 35. End with a call to action for your classmates.
